

Understanding Renewable Energy Prosumers

Webinar

21 May 2019

Background and objectives

At a different pace, the energy transition is now happening across Europe and the rest of the world.

It seems clear where we want to go. The new energy system should be carbon neutral, feed by green renewable energy sources and provide a more democratic and inclusive production and consumption model. Yet, how to get there is still a blur. Citizens organised in energy communities, including through energy cooperatives and other types of collective organisational structures, are emerging as an important new player with the potential to transform the energy model towards a more decentralised, inclusive, participatory and democratic system.

Organised by the PROSEU European project, this webinar will bring together the knowledge of both researchers and real-life energy collectives to characterise and learn more about the new community-based self-consumption and production models emerging throughout Europe.
